

Ao2: The first opportunity

Robert is very excited because the firm has received a Request for Proposal (RfP) for a large project from a potential client. He has left you a voicemail with the following information.

“Hi... This is Robert. I have just received an RfP from my old friend Marc from Hillside Capital. You know, the financial investor I have been working with during my time at McBain Consulting Group. They have acquired a European hotel chain and want to do a large transformation project. This is really great news... I’m sorry, my flight is boarding, I have to hang up... I’ll forward the RfP to you. Please take a look at the documents and start preparing our proposal. Lisa will be in touch for further instructions. Thanks, and see you tomorrow!”

Two hours later, you receive an e-mail from Lisa with a few more instructions for preparing the proposal:

- We’ll need a typical proposal PPT, you might want to use the templates from our standard slide deck.
- A typical proposal will start with one slide summarizing our understanding of the initial situation and objectives of the project.
- An important element will also be an illustration of the project approach, i.e. timeline and workstreams as well as a description of the detailed activities that we are planning for each phase.
- We also have to include one slide with our fee estimation. The table should show the number of days and daily rates per grade as well as the total fee. The scope of the RfP is the analysis phase only, so we’ll only provide financials for this phase. I’m assuming that Robert will charge two days per week for himself. I will work 50% on the project and yourself 100%. Please try using rates that are approx. 30-40% more expensive than our standard rates. But make sure that the total fee does not exceed 200k.
- Finally, please add my CV and one for yourself
- I am quite busy today, maybe I forgot to mention something. Please think about what other information might have to be included and also check the RfP and our standard slide deck.

Thanks, Lisa
